INTRODUCTORY NOTE

In 1912 The Newberry Library published a list of the books in the Edward E. Ayer Collection that contained the narratives or accounts of white men, women, and children who had suffered captivity among the various Indian tribes of America. Now, sixteen years later, enough additional material has been accumulated to make a second, although somewhat smaller, list. The first list contained 339 titles, this supplement has but 143. It contains different editions of some of the narratives of the first list, but it also contains the narrated experiences of 78 captives who were not named in the first list.
